Hello everyone. Welcome to the ETERNEL Platform, to the open educational space dedicated to the teachings of Grigori Grabovoi. Today we continue our Program Two, Applied Methods for Daily Life, Developing the Competence of Conscious Creation. Today we have the seventh session of Program Two, which is dedicated to Finance, Work, and Life Projects, Conscious Creation Through The Economic Sphere.

Program Information (1:07)

The purpose of the free programs at the ETERNEL Platform is to inform, educate, and inspire, to study more the teachings of Grigori Grabovoi — but it also offers a slightly different perspective, how to study the works of Grigori Grabovoi, and how to apply the methods of consciousness development in everyday life. So thank you for entering this space with love, and awareness that your presence supports the creation of collective harmony and eternal life for all.

Introduction to Session 7 (1:57)

Today we are going to work with something that is part of our everyday life, which is money, time, work, resources, family, projects, decisions, responsibilities, opportunities, maybe some difficulties. These things can appear very practical and material, and we may even think that they are separate from spiritual development, but today we will look at them from another perspective.

Today's topic, the subject, is Finance, Work, and Life Projects, Conscious Creation Through The Economic Sphere — and it is especially close to me, because it connects very directly with my own professional life. By profession, I am an economist, and, long before I encountered the teachings of Grigori Grabovoi, I worked with businesses and projects, involving millions of euros — finance, investment, costs, profit and loss, resources, planning, risk, forecasting — all of this was part of my everyday professional world. And, of course, money was at the center, and it mattered, and it still matters, of course, because, without adequate resources, even a wonderful idea can remain only an idea. A project has to function economically, if we want it to become real, stable, and able to continue.

But, when I look back at my professional path today, I recognize something that was always very important to me, even though, at that time, I wouldn't express it in that way. So, for sure, money was never my highest criterion, I needed to feel the meaning of what we are creating. I wanted to understand, why are we doing this? What are we actually creating? What will be the benefit from that project? What will become possible, because this project exists? And, somehow, when I could recognize a greater purpose in a project, my relationship with the whole project changed. So money remained important, but it became part of the means of realization, rather than the meaning of the project itself.

As I said, at that time, I knew nothing about the teachings of Grigori Grabovoi — and this is perhaps why, many years later, I find today's subject so interesting, because, when I began studying the numbers for successful business more deeply, I could recognize something familiar, but, finally, it was placed within a much larger perspective. Grigori Grabovoi speaks about the economy of eternal development — he places the human being at its basis, and connects human ideas and practical activity with the direction of eternal development. For me, this opens a very different way of approaching finances and business. So we do not have to begin with, "How can I make more money?" We can begin one step earlier. "What do I want to create? Why is it worth creating? What development will it support? What will it bring into people's lives?" And then we can ask, "What resources are necessary to make it real?" So money may be one of the resources, but there may also be knowledge, time, people, information, experiences, the organization, technology, human resources, our own abilities, our willingness to act. So money is just one of all these resources, it is not excluded from the picture, but it is placed inside the larger picture.

Our main source for today's session is Grigori Grabovoi's work, Numbers for Successful Business. And, when we hear this title, we might expect a book about how to become successful in business — and, yes, of course, this book contains many numerical sequences related to business, labor, money, capital, planning, analysis, and all possible economic concepts are there. But the main idea of that work of Grigori Grabovoi is much larger, because, as I said before, Grigori Grabovoi places economic activity inside the concept of eternal development, and this is the only, and the unique, approach in the economy — eternal development.

Grigori Grabovoi describes economy as human and social activity, through which the physical resources necessary for life are provided. So, in this economy of eternal development, the human being is the basis of this economy, and all human ideas and practical activities, directed towards eternal development, participate in forming its economic structure.

So the main question of today's session is not, "How can I have more money?" but, "How can I consciously organize my economic life, so that money, time, work, resources, and projects, serve my harmonious development?", or "How can the economic sphere participate in creating the conditions for eternal life for all?" So this is just to give a direction of today's session.

Framing Prior Content of Program as Preparation For This Session (11:13)

Before we enter today's topic, I would like us to look, for a moment, at the path we have already traveled together. Today we are going to speak about finances and business — and, at first, it may seem like a new subject, but, actually, I think we have been preparing for this topic from the beginning of Program Two.

If you recall, in the first session, we started with ourselves — we explored the basic structures of consciousness, and the position from which we consciously create — and, before changing something outside, we first developed our own ability to perceive and organize our own consciousness.

In Session Two, we moved from understanding to application — we explored how to maintain control while ordinary life is happening, not only during the concentration, or when we are quiet, and everything is okay, but when we are working, when we are deciding, when we are responding to requirements of the environment, or responding to events.

Then, in Session Three, we developed our understanding of numerical sequences, and control with numerical sequences. We learned that numerical sequences are no longer something that we just repeat — we started to work with numerical sequences consciously, and we learned that numerical sequences are an instrument of concentration and control, within the methods of the teachings of Grigori Grabovoi.

Then, in Session Four, we entered the area of health harmonization — we learned to bring the norm, we established the norm before working with the disturbance. And today we can apply exactly the same principle to a financial, or professional, situation. So, instead of beginning only with, I don't have enough money, my business has a problem, or my life is not working, because I'm lacking the resources, I'm lacking money, and many other things — today we first ask, "What is the normal, harmonious result I'm creating?" So we are using the same principles from the method of concentration related to health and the norm.

Then we moved to Session Five, where we worked on emotional stability and inner balance — and do we need emotional stability and inner balance in business, or in finances? Sure we do, because money is proven to be the highest activator of fear, of uncertainty, of pressure — you have the urgency, you have to pay the bills, unexpected expenses, problems at work, the salaries, payments, something is not developing as expected, in your career, or in general, in life related to finances. And in Session Five, we learned that emotional information does not have to determine our direction.

And then, last week, in Session Six, we entered into the topic of relationships and social harmonization — you recall that we recognized, "I'm a center, you are a center, and we both are free in this relationship." We explored how to create a common, harmonious direction, without trying to control another person. And now, for today's session, this becomes essential, because no business exists alone, no professional activity exists alone — there are clients, there are colleagues, there are partners, employees, suppliers, friends — and don't forget, very importantly, our family, because our work affects our family, our use of time affects our family, our financial decisions can affect our family. Our projects and ideas, which we turn into business, can affect the people closest to us.

Competency Approach For Session Seven (18:03)

So everything we have developed until now comes together in this session. Today, all our competencies become very real, simply by asking the questions: Can I maintain inner stability when money is involved? Can I perceive the norm when I see a financial problem? Can I remain conscious, when circumstances suddenly change? Can I recognize another person's freedom, when our interests are different? Can I harmonize my professional development with my family? Can I use numerical sequences consciously to harmonize my finances? Can I transform a goal into practical action? Can I maintain my development direction while continuing my ordinary work?

So you see, these are all competencies which we studied up to now separately, but now we need them together — because what I'm creating, through the economic sphere, depends on my competencies. What am I creating, through my work, or through my time, through money, my business projects? How can all this become part of harmonious development? In his teachings, Grigori Grabovoi gives a larger direction, and this is the realization of eternal development through the economic sphere. And he also gave the numerical sequences which we will speak about a little bit later. So our question today is, "How can I consciously organize the economic sphere of my life, so that my resources, work, project, support harmonious development and eternal life for all?"

So now we can understand why the previous six sessions were so important — you see how we build, step by step, we did not arrive at finances and business suddenly, we have been developing the competencies required to enter this field consciously. And we also see that today's session is not the end of the subject, it is an invitation to deeper study. We will take several principles and methods that we can immediately apply in everyday life, but, behind them, stands a much larger body of knowledge, that each of us can continue exploring.

References (22:40)

So here is the reference list of the works of Grigori Grabovoi that today's session is built around — we will use these works to work around three connected areas.

The first area is the informational cause of financial situations — we will learn to look beyond the visible amount of money, and perceive that larger structure of resources, and information, and decisions, time, relationships, and external conditions.

The second area is harmonization of our professional path — we will look at work, not only as a source of income, but as an area in which our abilities, our experience and contribution, can participate in development.

And the third area is conscious project creation and stabilization — we will move from the idea to the goal, from the goal to necessary resources, from structure to action, from action to a stable result that can continue developing.

Of course, the book Numbers for Successful Business will be our central source. It is important to understand that this subject is not contained in one book alone — there are other books that are especially valuable for deeper study.

For example, Control of Current Tasks helps us understand how to connect a larger, future goal, with what actually requires our action now.

Then Control of Creation develops the understanding of creation while we are acting — not to mistake that we are imagining a result, but we are making decisions, taking action, and bringing the result towards stability.

Then we have two interesting topics, Creation of Control Goal, and Controlling the Goals, which are important, when we want to understand how our desire becomes a consciously structured goal, and how that goal is connected with the future realization.

Then we have the book Creating an Element Base of Control, which helps us to recognize the elements necessary for a result — so we not only recognize, we also organize these elements, which are necessary to achieve results. This is especially useful for projects, because every project needs resources, people, information, action, connection between them — so we need to establish, and create, an elemental base of control.

Then we have the book Self-Organization of Personality through an External Event — this is important when something unexpected happens, for example, financial difficulty, or change at work, or in life, or delayed payment, or lost opportunity — and this book teaches us to work with the external event, without allowing that event to determine our entire future.

Then we have the book Expansion of Consciousness into the Area of Stable Control, which we used in the previous session — this book helps us to understand how to maintain our direction, our focus, on harmonious development, while continuing ordinary work, and adapting to changing circumstances.

Then we have the book Harmonious Control, which we also used, for previous competencies and sessions — because, for this specific session, this book gives us another essential dimension — our personal result should not be separated from general harmony. Our personal result is always part of mutual development, and a larger, constructive direction.

And the book Control of Social Objects is very useful, when our work, or project, involves other people, different interests, and larger social structures.

So I strongly recommend studying these works as well — they show us that work with finances and business requires much more than a financial method. It requires the ability to create a goal, to organize resources, to work with people, to respond to events, to choose, and make a decision about the next action, to maintain stability, and create harmonious development. So you see, we participate in the economic sphere every day. The question is, "How to organize money, time, work, and all other resources, so that they serve harmonious development and eternal life for all?"

Money Is Not The Economic Sphere - Money is One Element Within a Much Larger Picture (30:41)

Today we will take one journey, through an ordinary life situation, and, at the end, we will realize eight competencies, which will be the result of this journey today. So let's begin with something very simple — and that is the fact that we all need resources. We need food, place to live, clothing, transportation, technology, knowledge, materials, services, time, human cooperation. And, in our present economic system, many of these resources are accessed through money — so money is important, but money is not the entire economic sphere, money is only one element within it. So we can perceive that we have life, we have needs, we have resources, human activity, economic sphere, and development — and that gives us a different starting point. Instead of immediately asking, "How can I get more money?" we ask, "What development am I creating, and what resources does that development require?" And you can notice that this is a very different consciousness of the economic sphere.

Practice 1 - From Money To Development (33:09)

Grigori Grabovoi gives the numerical sequence 289 471 314917, for realizing eternal development through the economic sphere — he explains that it may be used before economic, or money-related, operations, even when they are not connected with business. And an interesting point is, that we can perceive not only the numbers, but also the spaces between them. So, within the method, these spaces in the numerical sequence can represent areas for the means, and information, necessary for further development. So, instead of perceiving empty economic space only as something missing, we can perceive it as something that can still be created, organized, and developed here. So this is why, when we use this numerical sequence, we ask the question, "What development am I creating, and what resources does that development require?"

So let's do a very simple practice — think of one real situation in your life, which can concern money, work, or business, or a professional goal — choose something real, maybe you need more income, or want to develop your work, create a new project, or simply you need financial stability — all of us need that financial stability — or you need the resources for something that matters to you, something important. So place this situation in front of you, and now ask the question, "What do I want?" Just let this answer appear.

So, when you have the answer to the question, "What do I want?" then ask, "What will this make possible?" So, if your situation is related more to income, then you ask, "What will more income make possible?" If you were thinking about stability, ask the question, "What will stability make possible?" Maybe you were thinking of freedom to develop — so then you ask, "What will development make possible?" And the answers could be contributions, support to others, new projects, education, family stability. And, when you are answering those questions, you may discover that money was not the final goal, it was the resource within a larger development.

And now perceive the general sequence Grigori Grabovoi gives, in relation to eternal development through the economic sphere: 289 - fill this space with the idea of what this goal is going to bring into this economic sphere. Then 471 - and again fill this space with an idea of what the realization of your goal, will bring into the economic sphere. And then 314917, and just perceive this sequence together with the larger direction — eternal development for all, harmonious development, on the base of my economic activity.

What Do I Actually Need? More Than Money - A Complete Picture (40:57)

Now we come to the very practical question — what do I actually need? In the previous step, we asked, what do I want, and what will this make possible? — and now we ask the question, what do I actually need? Suppose you have a project, and it's not moving, or something in your life related to finances is not moving. And very often the first thought is, "I don't have enough money," and perhaps that is true, but perhaps money is not the only missing element, because the project, or the situation, depends on information — so you need information, depends on knowledge, we need the knowledge, we need a collaborator, we need better organization, we need technology, we need more time, we need to make informed decisions. And maybe we already have many of the necessary resources, but we simply did not organize them.

In the book Numbers for Successful Business, Grigori Grabovoi mentions a wide range of economic factors, including labor, capital, information, and other resources. So, when we think, "What do I actually need?" we need to see that bigger picture — all the elements, all the resources which are involved, all the factors involved in the project, or in the situation.

Practice 2 - See The Resources (43:49)

So we might better understand it through practice — so keep the same goal in front of you, as you started at the beginning, and, around the goal, perceive the resources that may be connected with it — money, time, knowledge, information, people, skills, technology, materials, organization. Maybe you do not need all of them, just observe. You may even ask, "What do I already have?" That is important, because we do not begin with the question, what is missing, but with, what we already have, what already exists — and then we ask, what is actually missing? And then another question — what is actually missing, can I obtain it, can I learn, can I develop it, can I reorganize something, can I ask someone to help, can I cooperate? So, how can I differently use all of this that I already have? And you come to the realization that the lack of one resource, for example, lack of money, does not mean the lack of possibility.

What Exactly Am I Creating? - A Clear Goal Gives a Constructive Direction (46:09)

And so, when we define what we want, and what we really need, now we need a clear goal — what exactly am I creating? We usually think we have a goal, but many times we just describe what we do not want — for example, "I don't want financial problems, I don't want my business to fail, I don't want to lose this opportunity." — and these statements tell us what we fear, what we are afraid of, they do not yet tell us clearly what we are creating. So ask, "What am I creating?"— "I create stable economic conditions for my life and development. I create professional activities in which my abilities can develop and be useful. I create a stable project that provides real value, and can continue developing. I create sufficient resources for my family, and for development of my work."

Practice 3 - From Problem To Goal (48:01)

So take your situation, recognize the problem, do not deny it, but place the problem slightly aside, and ask, "What is the normal, constructive result?" Just see it, what is the normal, constructive result — how would you recognize it in reality, what would actually be functioning, what would you be doing differently, what would other people observe? So you perceive clearly the present situation, the goal, and the realization, and ask, "What connects me with this future?" It's not necessary to search for every step, just establish the direction, so that we move from problem, to constructive goal, and to its realization.

My Project Does Not Exist Alone (50:08)

And here I would like to add something that I consider very important. When we create a business, or a larger project, we can become completely focused on it — we know why we are doing it, we see its importance, we may even perceive it as part of our mission — but there are other people around us, our family, our partner, children, parents, friends, collaborators, and our project affects them, because perhaps we work longer, or we invest money, we travel a lot, our attention is constantly occupied, and family starts to experience uncertainty, because they simply do not understand what we are creating.

This is why I find this passage, near the end of the book Numbers for Successful Business, especially important. Grigori Grabovoi says that, in eternal development technologies, one should be balanced at the level of solutions for the family as a whole. And then he gives a numerical sequence, intended, within the book's method, to create conditions for harmony among family members, including the reactions of friends. And this deserves our attention, because harmonious development cannot mean "my project develops, while everything around me becomes disharmonious." I would love to read a quote from the book, related to that part.

Grigori Grabovoi says: "In eternal development technologies, one must always be perfectly balanced, at a level of solutions for family in the whole — and, therefore, there are certain series of numbers which, above all, create the conditions for harmony among all family members, including the reaction of friends." Number is 814 418 719.

"In eternal development technologies, the task is often determined by the need to achieve the mandatory result of the action, to settle the situation in a way — classes, and whatever hobbies, have internal substructure, constantly focused on eternal development and acquisition of new, forthcoming knowledge. One must properly focus the knowledge, so that both the interests, and activities, of a particular deed, were harmoniously linked in the common goal of eternal development." 718 419 47148.

Practice 4 - Family, Work and Project in One Harmonious Field (54:24)

So let's do the practice, and see yourself — so put yourself in front of you, and place your work, or a project, and expand the field — so you see yourself, your work, project, family, people close to you. Just recognize — do not try to control them, or decide how they should react — just recognize that you, with your project, affect a larger field. You may even ask, how does my activity affect the people close to me? And, when you look at the relationship, or how your project affects the larger field, and people around you, your family, your friends, look for the answer to the question, what needs harmonization? Maybe you need to explain something, or listen, or time needs to be reorganized. Maybe some responsibilities need to be shared differently, or boundaries need to be set, including financial boundaries — or you simply need to be more present, when being with your family.

And now perceive the numerical sequence: 814 418 719. Just allow the family and your activity to be perceived within one, harmonious field — because family, plus activity, ensures harmonious development. You may even ask, "What can I do to support this harmony?" And notice how one answer appears. This is important, because the numerical sequence, the concentration, is connected with the real action. And perceive your activity within a larger, common development: 718 419 47148. With this simple exercise and concentration, we ensure the harmony of development of our project, and we ensure the harmony within our family, which is supposed to support us, to give us that sense of stability, to provide support emotionally.

So, when you think of any situation, whether it is a project, or just a simple financial issue, include, in your concentration, the entire family and friends — because that is the place where we come home, and we get strength, and support.

When Something Goes Wrong - Life Continues - One Event Is Not My Future (1:01:10)

Because, easily, things can go wrong, in everyday reality. We have a goal, we have resources, we created harmony — but then something unexpected happens. Many things can happen — if a payment is late, or a client says no, or suddenly expenses increase, or maybe some collaborator leaves, or prices change — and, all of a sudden, through that one, unexpected event, depends our future.

For example, we have a client who rejected the proposal — that is an event. But what happens within our mind — and remember the session about emotions, and the process of creating the emotional reaction — our mind says, "Nobody wants my work. The project will fail. I will never have enough money." So notice the difference — the first is information, and then comes the conclusion about the future. So we need to separate what happened, from what I'm concluding from what happened.

There Is Nothing Impossible (1:03:39)

And, when something goes wrong, it is important to remember an important statement of Grigori Grabovoi, from the book Numbers of Successful Business — "There is nothing impossible in this world." And the numerical sequence is 519 7148, and Grigori Grabovoi connects this numerical sequence with eternal life for all people: 894 719 78 48.

Quote: "There is nothing impossible in this world" — 519 7148 — "especially if you do this for all people, eternal life, then, accordingly, you will be able to achieve what you set as your goal, for the people, and for yourself." 894 719 78 48.

So we face the problem, and we immediately switch our awareness and consciousness to — "there is nothing impossible in the world" — and this is not denial of reality, for example, "there is a problem, therefore I pretend there is no problem, because everything is possible" — it's quite the opposite situation, we recognize reality accurately, but we do not close our future possibility, because of this one, present event — we open up, through this statement, "there is nothing impossible," we open up for future possibilities.

Practice 5 - Reopen The Possibility - From Limitation To New Possibilities (1:05:58)

So let's practice, to reopen the possibility. Choose a situation connected with your financial life, and just recognize what actually happened, only one event, only one. And maybe you started to conclude, "I cannot do this, there is no solution for this, this is too late, I don't have enough, nobody will help me." Now try to separate the event from the conclusion — the event, what happened, and the conclusion, what I added to this event. And now introduce the numerical sequence: 519 7148, "there is nothing impossible in this world." You don't have to force yourself to believe something, just let your perception open.

And you may ask, "What possibility am I not yet seeing?" If nothing appears immediately, that is fine, that's okay, just remain open, and perceive your larger, constructive goal — so establish the direction of your goal, for yourself, and for all people: 894 719 78 48. And, after that, immediately ask, "What can I actually do?" And this is so important to ask, "what can I actually do", because you move from just thinking of the situation, to the action.

Use What Is Available Now - Small Steps - Real Opportunities - Progress Today (1:09:37)

And to do something. Sometimes we wait for the ideal circumstances — when I have enough money, when I have enough time, when I find the right person, when everything is ready, then I will begin. But development begins with something much smaller — and Grigori Grabovoi speaks about the ability to use even the smallest, favorable circumstances, and he gives the numerical sequence for that: 419 488 71. And this gives us a great, practical question — what is available to me now? So we don't have to wait for enough money, when I have enough time — no, what is available to me now? Maybe I have one hour, or one person, or one idea, one telephone call, a small amount of money, or just a piece of information. That's all.

Practice 6 - The Next Precise Action (1:11:29)

So let's put it in practice, continuing from our previous practice. See the future result, and look from the future towards the present, towards today, this moment — what do I have available now? And perceive the number 419 488 71. And just choose one, concrete action — maybe to call, or write, calculate, ask, learn, stop, or begin. Just make it concrete, a concrete action. So what does it mean — we do not say, "I need to organize my finances," but you say, "Today I review my income and expenses" — so it's a concrete action. You don't say, "I need to develop my project," the concrete action is, "Today I send the proposal," or, "Today I will contact three people" — very concrete action. And you can see, when you think of the action, the real action will happen in the future, but you think of it, and you perceive it right now — and that future moves through the present action.

Time And Money (1:14:11)

And now we come to something that we all experience — I don't have enough time, or I don't have enough money — and Grigori Grabovoi also speaks about that, in the book Numbers for Successful Business — he says, you must be able to use time, and he gives the numerical sequence: 814 418 81 — and also numerical sequence 418 41849, and 4148188. It is important, because, in that part of the book, Grigori Grabovoi does not stop with the concepts of only time and money, but he develops a practical relationship between time and money, and develops towards the idea of applying knowledge, which is already accumulated, to the conversion of time into eternal life. And he also states that life does not depend on money — money is described as a practical simulator, connected with reality, through which methodology related to eternal life can be developed.

He says, "you must be able to use time" — 814 418 81 — "you can use the number series 418 41849, which will assist in operations, and often will initiate the action. Numerical series 4148188 helps at conversion of time into money. You have to deal with money, so you can quickly learn how to convert — accumulated knowledge can be practically applied to the conversion of time into eternal life. Realizing this, we can perceive technology, as the eternal past, creates the future eternal life, which is irrespective towards the past. This suggests that life does not depend on money — but, as you can see, money can be used as a kind of simulator, connected with reality, which allows developing of methodology for eternal life. By analogy, one can identify a lot of other reality simulators, that allow one to promptly learn the knowledge of eternal life, which is guaranteed to provide you, and all other people, healthy eternal life."

Practice 7 - Time Becomes Development (1:18:29)

So let's do the practice — think about your day, think about your time — Where does your time go? To solving problems, or to family, worrying, waiting? Maybe it goes to work, messages, administration — just observe without judgment. And just ask yourself, which use of my time creates development, and focus on the numerical sequence 814 418 81 — "I learn to use time consciously." And now see the action that needs to begin, and focus on numerical sequence 418 41849, and perceive the relationship between your time, productive activity, and economic result — 4148188. Just perceive the very practical chain — my time, my attention, my action, value created, economic result, resource for further development — and then go beyond money, and ask, "What am I using my lifetime to create?"

So you see that time does not magically become money — time can be converted into money, through conscious action, when you are able to answer the question, what am I using my lifetime to create?

Maintain The Direction While Life Changes (1:22:07)

And we come to the point that we need to maintain direction, while life changes — so we establish the goal, we begin, but circumstances change — does stability mean that our plan can never change? No — a method may need to change, timing may change, people may change, but our constructive direction remains.

Practice 8 - The Stable Thread (1:22:56)

So let's practice — think of your future result, and perceive a simple, luminous point, representing that direction — so there is a light point in front of you, which is the direction of your movement — and feel that this direction is stable, even when circumstances change.

See yourself working, or meeting people, solving problems, and, from time to time, look at the luminous point of your direction — check, "Am I still moving toward the constructive result?" If yes, just continue. If not, just adjust — maybe the method needs to be changed, or the action, or timing — but, whatever you do, make sure that your direction point does not change, that it remains stable, within everyday activity. Just act, observe, adjust, and continue.

What Is Success? (1:25:18)

And now imagine that the project succeeds — the money arrives, the business develops, you receive the job, the project is successful, you have all the resources needed, and you think you reach the end? No — we return to the beginning, and we ask, "What does this result make possible?" In the book Numbers for Successful Business, somewhere near the end of the book, Grigori Grabovoi speaks about business sustainability, in relation to eternal development, and he connects business with practical measures, future development, knowledge, and the larger direction of eternal life, which I already mentioned. So, when we check if we succeed, we need to verify, or establish, what is success — how do we evaluate success? Do we evaluate success only by, how much did I get, or is it stable? Does it support life? Does it support my family? Does it create value? Does it support other people's development? Can it continue? Does it serve the direction of eternal development for all?

Final Integrated Practice - Bringing Everything Together (1:27:34)

So let's do the final practice, by bringing everything together. Choose the real situation — it can be the same situation as you have been working with till now — and just place it before you, and ask, "What development am I creating?" And focus on numerical sequence 289 471 314917 — this is the series for economic activity within eternal development. And you still focus on the situation, the real situation in your life. And now we work on resources, and we ask, "What does this result actually require?" Just recognize what needs to be developed. And the next step is to make sure that our goal is formulated properly — you ask yourself, "What exactly am I creating?" Just see the constructive result. And, to make sure that everything goes harmoniously, you need to harmonize your base, and this is your family and your friends — so expand the field, and perceive your family, and people close to you, and think of, "How can this development be harmonious for the whole?" Perceive numerical sequence 814 418 719, and connect your particular activity with the common goal of development, 718 419 47148.

And, if you perceive a limitation or barrier, focus on numerical sequence 519 7148, "there is nothing impossible in the world," and 894 719 78 48, establish the goal in the larger direction, for yourself and for people. Focus on numerical sequence 419 488 71, to recognize even a small, available possibility. Focus on numerical sequences for time — 814 418 81, to use time consciously; 418 41849, to allow the next action to become clear; 4148188, to perceive clearly the movement, time, action, economic value, resource development — and then think of action, "What requires my action now?" — one, precise action, and perceive yourself doing it — make a call, check the to-do list. And now see ordinary life continuing — events may change, information may change, but your constructive direction remains — and you always, no matter what is happening in everyday life, check your direction point, that small, luminous point in front of you. And, finally, perceive the achieved result. Do not stop there, because, through the achieved result, new possibilities open — your development, development of your family, of your friends, people connected with your work, development of society — just expand your perception further, and establish harmonious development and eternal life for all.

So you can use this slide, for any situation in your life related to a project, to finances, to work, to new projects, new ideas.

From Method To Competence (1:36:12)

You noticed, through this, that we did not today learn a method how to get money — we learned to look at the economic sphere differently. So we began with, what development am I creating, and what resources do I have, what is my goal, how does my project affect my family, what happens when circumstances become difficult, what possibility remains, what can I use now, how am I using my time, what actions belong to the future I'm creating, how do I maintain harmonious direction while circumstances change, and what does my success make possible for further development?

So this is where we speak about the competence development. First, when we are beginners, we might be able to recognize the problem, and just remember a method, and you have a method, and you start to use it — this is the first step. And if you are a little bit more developed practitioner, you recognize the situation, you immediately apply the method, and you take action. And, when you are developing the competence, you recognize the situation before it becomes a crisis, you can organize the resources, you can harmonize relationships, establish the goal, and act accordingly. And, eventually, you develop a complete competence, when you know exactly what you are creating, you recognize the resources, include and embrace the family and friends and larger field, do not close possibilities because of difficulties, use your time consciously, take precise action, and maintain direction, and create continuous, harmonious development.

The Economic Sphere - An Area Of Creation (1:38:52)

So today we can finish with a simple recognition — money is important, but life is not money. Work is important, but life is not work. Business is important, but it does not exist separately from our family and other people. So there are many important things, but they are not all. When we bring all elements together, consciously, the economic sphere can become something much more than an area of necessity or worry — it can become an area of creation, an area in which we learn to perceive, to organize, to cooperate. So be aware of this economic sphere — we are not separated from it, we are part of it. When we are aware of the economic sphere, this really makes our goal realization possible — the goal of harmonious development and eternal life for all. So, when we control for finances, for business, for projects, the point is that we think of, "How can what I create today become a resource for harmonious development and eternal life for all?"

Closing Remarks (1:41:14)

So thank you so much for your participation in today's session. Preparing this session has been very personal for me, as an economist — I spent many years, as I said, working with large businesses and projects, and I understood the practical world of finance, and resources, and planning, and risk, and results. At the same time, somewhere deeper, I always felt that the meaning and the purpose of what we were creating mattered more than money. Looking back, I realize that, perhaps, I knew this at the level of Soul, but I did not know how to consciously connect deeper knowledge with the practical rules of economic reality. Today I see these two worlds differently, and they are not separate — so the deeper direction can guide what we create within the economic sphere. The most important thing I'm discovering, through this session, is that the economic sphere can become an area of conscious creation.

Another challenge in preparing this session was deciding how to approach such a large subject — we could speak much more about economics itself, we could focus mainly on practical ways of managing money, we could explore financial behavior, psychology of abundance — this is also a great topic, and all of these could become valuable subjects on their own. But I realize that the economic sphere is also the place where all the competencies we have been developing, they meet, at this point — so we need conscious participation, we need a clear goal, we need emotional stability, we need relationships and communication, need to recognize resources, work with external events, make decisions, use time, take actions, maintain direction when circumstances change.

So, for this session, I chose not to concentrate only on money, but on larger questions — "How can we consciously organize our economic life, so that our money, work, resources, relationships, and projects, support harmonious development?" There are certainly many other ways we could approach this subject, and maybe we will explore some other time later — but, at this moment, this approach feels the most useful, because it allows us to bring together everything we have developed so far, and apply it in real life. So, in this sense, the economic sphere becomes a laboratory of competence — a place where consciousness meets reality, where our inner direction has to become practical action.

Thank you so much for your attention and active participation. Wish you all to have great success in everything that life brings to you to deal with, new projects, new ideas — to use those possibilities to be creative, and live full, creative, productive, loving, joyful lives. Thank you. Thank you so much for your attention, and see you next Saturday, with a new topic on Program Two — and see you tomorrow, in daily concentration. Thank you so much.
